Thursday, June 8, 2017

Required: 9:00 a.m. – 2:00 p.m. (including lunch)

If you are a doctoral student who is interested in conducting research in public management, please consider applying to this research development workshop! This workshop will engage students in hands-on learning across a range of topics that may not be covered systematically or consistently across Ph.D. programs. By attending the workshop, you will:

- Gain insight into the ‘publication journey’ of academic manuscripts by:
 - Writing and getting feedback on an original review of a recently published manuscript;
 - Discussing the revision process the manuscripts’ author went through before their work was accepted for publication;
- Build a network among peers, future colleagues, and potential employers; and
- Get tips from experienced scholars on selecting journals to target for different types of work.

Doctoral students at any stage are welcome to attend and will be selected to participate based on the quality and completeness of their application. Interested students must apply to the workshop by March 31, 2017. Your application should include: (1) a short letter of intent (1 page max.) describing your research interests including the current stage of your research, and (2) your current CV.
